Affiliate channel and football calendar — reference material for the CS team

Updated 27 Aug 2026 · calendar coverage: 27 Aug to 30 Sep · all times in Brasília time (BRT)

Why this document exists

New-player volume has grown fast and will stay high over the coming weeks. Nearly all of that flow has a known origin: the affiliate channel, concentrated in a single operation, Grupo Dupla. The pages below explain who brings these players in, what they see before signing up, and on which days traffic climbs, using the football calendar as the reference. This material gives the team context; it is not training and not a procedure manual.

The affiliate channel in three lines

An affiliate is a partner who promotes BetWarrior on their own channels and is paid on the performance of the players they refer. The current base has around 15 active affiliates — influencers, tipsters and content sites. One of them accounts for most of the volume: Grupo Dupla.

Grupo Dupla

Grupo Dupla is an affiliate agency running a network of 17 sub-affiliates — influencers, each with their own audience. Promotion happens on Telegram and Instagram, with football betting tips and offers, including accumulators (bets that combine several matches on a single slip).

Today this operation generates between 400 and 600 FTDs per day. An FTD is a player's first-time deposit: that is 400 to 600 new depositing customers a day from a single source.

What to expect from a player arriving through this channel

- They arrive with a bet in mind. They saw a tip on Telegram or Instagram and signed up to bet on that match, often in the hours before kickoff.
- Sign-up, deposit and bet happen in sequence. Anything that blocks that path (deposit, verification, access) tends to become an immediate contact, because their match is about to start.
- Accumulators are common and usually mix Brazilian and European matches on the same slip. European games move this audience too, not only Brazilian ones.
- Volume follows the calendar: peaks in sign-ups, deposits and contacts line up with the days shaded gold in the tables below.

The shape of the month (27 Aug to 30 Sep)

September splits into two blocks. Through 20 Sep, club football runs at full pace: Brasileirão on weekends and continental knockouts from Tuesday to Thursday. The 8–17 Sep fortnight is the heaviest of the month, with the Libertadores and Sudamericana quarter-finals — eight Brazilian clubs alive, four in each competition — plus the opening round of the Champions League league phase.

From 21 Sep to 6 Oct comes the extended post-World Cup FIFA window: Brasileirão, Copa do Brasil and the European leagues all stop. National teams play instead — Brazil has two friendlies against Australia (25 and 29 Sep) and the UEFA Nations League starts on 24 Sep. Club-driven volume drops, and attention concentrates on Brazil's match days.

The Copa do Brasil wraps up its quarter-finals in early September and only returns in November: semi-finals on 1 and 8 Nov, final on 6 Dec.

How to read the tables

Rows with a gold background are priority 1: matches involving Brazilian clubs or the national team, which concentrate the volume. White rows are priority 2: the main European matches, relevant for accumulators. Ties and rounds without a detailed schedule yet appear as “TBC” — Conmebol, CBF and UEFA release dates and kickoff times in blocks, close to match week.

Keeping this document current

This calendar reflects what was confirmed as of 27 Aug. Three updates already have a date to land: the Champions League schedule comes out by 29 Aug; Conmebol assigns days and kickoff times for the quarter-finals before the week of 8 Sep; and CBF details the next Brasileirão rounds through the month. Practical suggestion: review the document every Monday, using the official CBF, Conmebol and UEFA schedules as the source.
